—A remarkable musical organization is that of the convict choir at Auburn prison. The organist is sentenced for grand larceny; the first violin, first tener and double beas are all murderers; the second tenor, basses and sopranes are all burgiars, and the professor is a forger. From the latter false notes sometimes issue, while the murderers murder music most creditably.

In the old prison of Amsterdam. Holland, the beam riveted in the wall, upon which capital offenders were formerly executed, has never been removed, though the death punishment has long been abolished by the Butch Government. It is a noteworthy fact that the number of assassinations has since steadily decreased, and flo quentures are to-day raised in Holland touching the advisability of restoring the gibber and the rope.

—A Paris paper tells of a respectable looking gentleman who entered a tobacconist's and chose a package of cigarettes. Just as he was about to pay he perceived that he had forgotten his purse. Natually, he excused himself, and offered to return the cigarettes. "No, sin," and the tobacconist, "you can pay me another time." The gentleman thanked him, and added pleasantly, "I inspire you with conditione, thee, do I!" "Oh! it's such a trifling sum," replied the dealer. The gentleman turned red, and departed in confusion.
